Plans for New
Wilson Red Line Station

More Photos and Videos

The Chicago Transit Authority's Wilson Red Line station is one of the most traveled on the North Side. It's also considered to be one of most in need of help and repair.

To the rescue is a $203 million plan not only meant to upgrade station signals and surrounding track, but also to completely reconstruct the station, adding a glass and steel canopy, glass-enclosed entrance and another entrance with access to Target and Aldi.

"This is a great starting point for the future design of an important station that helps thousands of Chicagoans get to work and school each day," said Mayor Rahm Emanuel said in a statement. "The Red Line is the backbone of our transportation network."
